Mr. Gromvko was succeeded as foreign minister by Eduard A. Shevardnadze, head of the Com Party in the Republic of Georgia, who was promoted Tuesday to full membership in the Politburo.

The choice for foreign minister surprised diplomats. Mr. Shevardnadze has had little experience in diplomacy, beyond leading a few delegations abroad.

In doing so, Mr. Gorbachev broke a pattern set by his three immediate predecessors, all of whom had combined the leadership of the party with the presidency. Mr. Gorbachev explained that

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — In two weeks of voting on the military au-thorization bill for fiscal 1986, the House of Representatives shifted to a harder line on defense and foreign-policy issues. The House voted to create or expand weapons systems and to authorize new measures to prevent or penalize espionage. Some mem-bers attributed the votes, which often went beyond the recommendations of the Democratic leadership and committee chairmen, to the hijacking of a TWA jetliner and other recent incidents involving U.S. foreign policy. An equally significant factor appeared to be the desire of a key bloc

These and dozens of other items must be reconciled with the legislation enacted earlier by the Republican-controlled Senate. After Congress returns next week from its Independence Day recess, a conference committee will try to agree on a single plan that can be approved separately by both houses.

Lawmakers and lobbvists said last week that the votes in the House clearly reflected the frustration many members felt over the hijacking of TWA Flight 847, the killing of four U.S. Marines in El Salvador and revelations of possible damage by a spy ring allegedly working inside the U.S. Navy.

"The whole debate is influenced by what's happened internationally in the last two weeks," said Representative Leon E. Panetta, a Democrat of California.

Steven Hogland, 39, a reformed alcohobe who has published a booklet listing things to do and places to go in Washington where there is little or no drinking, cites the national capital's cocktail parties, often a standup extension of work, and the high rate of job turnover, resulting in a steady stream of lonely newcomers to the city who seek companionship in bars.

White House U.S. Officials Say Assad's Aid May Bring Better Ties Is Said to Curb FBI on Terrorism By George Lardner Jr.

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — The FBI has been trying to expand its coun-terterrorist forces since last year but has been turned down twice by the White House, according to a member of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. Senator Lloyd M. Bentsen, a Democrat of Texas, said he learned of the budgetary lid as a result of his inquiries about the adequacy of the burean's resources.

"It's one of the most foolish things I've seen since I've been up here," Mr. Bentson said. "Here you have terrorism on an increase around the world, and you know it's going to increase in the United States and we must fight it."

According to figures compiled by Mr. Bentsen and his staff and verified by other sources, the Federal Bureau of Investigation had been seeking an increase of $11 million over last year's budget of $39.5 million for counterterrorism to pay for 191 more agents, support staff and other expenses.

The biggest chunk of the additional appropriation, about $5.7 million, would have been used to expand FBI counterterrorism task forces set up with local police in Boston, New York, Chicago and Washington since 1980 and to establish new ones in Newark, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

The rest of the money would have been devoted to strengthening the FBI's elite Hostage Rescue Team, now said to have about 50 agents, and broadening the scope of the National Terrorism Research and Analysis Center, begin

The Road to Argentina

The deficit of the United States in its foreign trade has become gigantic and ominous. The trade deficit is not one of the numbers to which Washington reacts sharply, like the inflation and unemployment rates, but it ought to be. The Commerce Department has just published the trade data for May: Americans imported $30 billion worth of goods and exported $17 billion worth. The country is now riding a great boom of spending and consumption, much of it with borrowed money. A crucial part of that borrowed money comes from abroad. As credit-card statements sometimes say, you don't have to make any payment this month but interest charges will accumulate.

Americans as a society are now consuming more than they produce at a rate of about $120 billion a year. The world's largest creditor until several years ago, the United States by now is probably a debtor. The statistics here are not entirely reliable, but you can see the net earnings on foreign investment dropping like a stone. In the peak year, 1981, the United States had a net income of $34 billion on its foreign investments — meaning that it collected $34 billion more abroad than it paid out on foreign investments in America. That income was down to $19 billion last year, and was running at a rate of $10 billion in the first quarter of this year. By the end of the year it is likely to be zero. By this time in 1986, if it continues on its present path, the United States will be borrowing abroad to pay interest on its foreign debt.

That is the road to Argentina.
"Overconsumption — unduly raising current consumption at the expense of future levels — is like a time bomb," observes one close watcher, John D. Paulus, chief economist for the investment banking firm Morgan Stanley and Company. "As it ticks away it seems to be burting nobody, but ultimately it has great destructive potential." In time, he points out, it would lead either to a fall in the dollar with higher inflation, or rising interest rates with sluggish economic growth — or both.

If foreigners eventually tire of lending to the United States, it will have to meet its debt obligations by running a trade surplus. Reversing the present congenial pattern, it will have to sell more abroad than it imports. That has happened to the Latin American countries, as they struggle with their debts, and it has not been a comfortable change.

For the present, life is prosperous and the sun is shining for most Americans. But at some point in the coming years, and no one knows when, the credit will run out. Then Americans will find themselves working harder and earning less. Why? Because they will be paying for the great surges of foreign goods that they are currently buying on the installment plan. - THE WASHINGTON POST.

Time for Air Boycotts

Of course the United States is right to sponsor a boycott of Beirut's airport until some force in Lebanon deprives hijackers of that safe harbor. But chaotic Lebanon is already boycotted by all but some small Middle Eastern airlines, and travelers need no further warnings about Beirut's hazards. Why not widen this campaign? Tighter safeguards are needed, but the most effective onnce of prevention would be a declaration that Wash ton will block air service to any country, allies included, that refuses to punish aerial terror.

No security system will work unless diplo-macy assures the universal application of protective measures. More overt pressures should be welcome now even in countries like Japan and India that used to hesitate to give offense. With the promise of American enforcement, the first step is to terror-proof airports. By all means eliminate curbside luggage check-ins and tighten procedures to prevent unaccompanied baggage from being slipped aboard. Putting armed marshals on airliners, as President Reagan proposes, is worth more debate. Pilots are terrified of shoot-outs at high altitude. They do not agree that El Al, the Israeli airline, owes its impressive security to armed guards aloft; far more important has been meticulous checking of passengers and luggage.

But how to make all airlines and airports equally diligent? The U.S. Federal Aviation Administration offers inspectors to look for chinks in security systems. International agen-ties also help. But when their recommendations are ignored, the only effective remedy may be to punish the indifferent country by alerting travelers to the risks on its soil.

Above all, the odds against hostage-takers have to be changed. That will happen only when the world begins to enforce the multitude of agreements requiring the punishment of aerial piracy. They have not been enforced against Iran, which still shelters the hijackers who murdered two Americans last December. There has been no retalistory boycott of Tehran's airport because Washington fears that even its friends would shrink from it. That kind of resignation just won't do.

If America, with its lucrative air traffic will not lead, who will? If the headlines of recent days have not made the time ripe, what will? Secretary of State George Shultz now cogently distinguishes four strands of a serious anti-terror policy: better public understanding of the threat, improved intelligence, tighter airport security and raising the costs of terror-ism. Three of these goals will be advanced if President Reagan proclaims that he will close America's airports to the planes of countries that harbor hijackers and of those that indulge them by refusing to join in the ostracism.

Bad Habits in Zimbabwe

but won't go away, Ian Smith lingers as a political presence. It was Mr. Smith who in series of horrors against the African people." 1965 proclaimed the illegal independence of Rhodesia. His white minority regime spurned all proposals for majority rule and waged war against two guerrilla armies until 1979, when Britain brokered a bargain that gave Zimbabwe independence under a multiracial constitution. Now, in Zimbabwe's second election, a majority of 35,000 white voters are apparently sticking with "good old Smitty."

Under a constitution that cannot be changed until 1990, whites have 20 of 100 seats in Parliament. Thus Mr. Smith can make speeches but not governments. Power is in the hands of three million blacks, whose votes are now being cast, and of Prime Minister Robert Mugabe, leader of ZANU, the majority party. Even so, Mr. Mugabe is furious. He is castigating whites as racists. The vote shows, he says,

Like the man in the rhyme who isn't there that whites cling to the past and reject recon-

Those borrors are real, and so is racism. But Mr. Mugabe's indignation is selective. After independence his authority was confirmed in a lopsided election, yet he turned vengefully against a tribally based opposition party led by his erstwhile patron and now chief rival. Joshua Nkomo. Army and paramilitary forces made bloody sweeps through Mr. Nkomo's stronghold in Matabeleland. A censored press was kept from reporting these raids against opponents that the government called "bandits." All this was done under Mr. Smith's emergency laws, which Mr. Mugabe has kept on the books. It would appear that Zimbabwe's white voters are not the only sinners who scorn reconciliation and cling to the sorrier traditions of the pre-independence past.

Why Wasn't Mengele Found?

How was it possible that Josef Mengele eluded capture for 35 years? In the light of the evidence, catching him would not have been difficult. His protection and cover in South America was not at all elaborate.

For most of the 10 years he spent in Argentina from 1949 to 1959, he was running a firm in Buenos Aires under his own name, and in 1956 he applied at the West German Embassy there - again under his own name - for the delivery of his birth certificate. In Brazil [he lived] in the scruffy suburbs of perfectly accessible towns and cities. Here he received numerous visits from Europe. The emerging catalogue of [his] trips to Europe is even more outrageous. The pretensions of the Israeli secret services, and their claims to be close behind Mengele. are revealed as empty bombast. Most culpable are the West German authorities and - it must be said - the world media. It is now plain that a good pair of investigative journal-ists, given plenty of time, commitment and a little luck, ought to have found Mengele.

MOSCOW — A warning that "serious consequences for the relations" of the Soviet Republies and Japan might result from the recent series of border incidents was made [on July 2] when the Soviet government filed a strenuous protest with Tokio holding Japan responsible for future violation of Soviet territory by Manchurian troops. The protest delivered by Ambassador Konstantin Yurenev at Tokio listed recent incidents where the Soviets charged that either Japanese ships or troops violated Soviet territory or territorial waters. The protest concluded: "The Soviet government expects Japan to declare her intention to maintain peaceful relations on the border and take prompt measures to prevent provocative action on the part of Japanese Manchurian authorities."

Argentina: Help Will Have to Come From Outside

SAN DIEGO — The return of de-mocracy in Argentina and Uruguay has opened political space for the expression of economic demands long repressed by military dictatorships. Both new democratic govern-ments inherited a double handicap: a bankrupt country and a mobilized population demanding compensa-tion for long years of sacrifice.

The fundamental issue is the enormous foreign debt accumulated un-der the military. Early last month it stood at $1,700 per man, woman and child in Argentina and $2,025 in Uruguay — a combined total of about $54 billion. The debt has created a vicious circle: Payment of principal and interest virtually eliminates investment in economic development; absence of development guarantees, in turn, that future payments must be made out of existing resources.
Who will pay? The governments have four possible answers.

The first is simply not to pay, or to reduce or postpone payment. Raul Alfonsin's government in Argentina moved initially in this direction, but retreated in the absence of support from other Latin American debtors. A second solution is to make local capital pay through heavy taxation or outright confiscation, but neither government appears willing to nationalize the economy. Both count on private initiative, so measures that stimulate further capital flight and disinvestment must be avoided.

A third solution is to sacrifice the military establishments. They were responsible for the financial debacle the national budgets. The problem is that these bodies, parasitic and use-less though they be, retain the internal monopoly of force. Civilian authorities must exercise great caution in their dealings with the military hierarchies lest these be provoked into renewed coup attempts.

The only avenue left is to socialize the cost by further compressing wages and social expenditures. However, the economic logic of shifting the debt burden to the mass of the population runs contrary to the political logic of the new governments. That mass, after all, is their principal source of legitimacy and power.

But the lack of alternatives has led both governments reluctantly to adopt this solution. Mr. Alfonsin's announcement of a "war economy" pointed in that direction. The dra-matic measures that followed, including wage and price controls and the symbolic change of the peso to the austral, confirmed his determination to push down this road.

quite another. Although long stag-nant, Argentina and Uruguay still boast some of the higher indicators in the Third World. Paradoxically, though, past development conspires against present efforts to spread the debt burden, for two reasons:

 There is no large rural peasantry that can fend for itself. In these Rio de la Plata neighbor countries, almost the entire population is incorporated into the money economy and is thus crucially dependent on government wage and price decisions.

With high levels of education and long experience in making demands on government, these popula-tions are both aware of what is taking place and able to mobilize in selfdefense. Everyone knows the government's predicament and everyone is determined to avoid paying the price. State bank workers in Urugnay wear lapel buttons stating, "We will not pay the debt with our salaries." Mu-rals in Buenos Aires show a starving child, with the message, "Let's not pay the debt this way." Soon after Mr. Alfonsin's initial "war" anent, speakers at a huge labor rally demanded to know "war against whom?" and told him to resign if he could not keep his populist promises. Pressures such as these account for the recent mass reincorporation of dismissed employees in the Uruguayan state payroll, in direct contradiction of the austerity effort. In Argentina, the attempt to reconcile debt payments with modest economic reactivation failed, producing a 1,010percent inflation rate.

Such events exemplify how little room for maneuver these govern-ments have. Their growing difficulties have prompted groups on both extremes of the political spectrum to begin reorganizing. Failure to solve economic problems have led to repeated revolutionary upheavals and military coups in the past. Although repressive military retive cannot be discarded. After decades of unsuccessful military and civilian experiments, these societies might incline to the one national course not yet attempted - that proposed by the extreme left.

Against such formidable odds, the hopes of the current governments for survival hinge on two factors. One is the ability of the elected presidents. The second is the collective memory of atrocities committed by the mili-tary regimes. But neither force will be enough to preserve political stability. Time, in particular, runs against making use of past memories to justi-fy present conditions. So survival of these fragile democracies depends on external support.

Transnational banks that happily financed the economic policies of military dictatorships have not proved willing to give their successors much breathing space. The U.S. gov-ernment will thus have a decisive role, given its ability to provide direct aid and to lessen the severity of con-ditions imposed by the International Monetary Fund. Costs of assisting these governments, including those of facilitating modest economic regimes are the most probable sequel to failed democracies, a second alternacal chaos after their demise.

The exhaustion and fragmentation seem to affect all sectors. Opposition groups and parties are deeply divided, unable to come forth with clear proposals. Confidence in the govern-ing Radical Party has also lapsed. In politics, perceptions often become re-ality, and if the power of the government has eroded, the public perception of it has eroded exponentially. So far President Raul Alfonsin has withstood the erosion. His most important decision was a stylistic one: He chose sobering truth rather than demagognery. His main accomplish-ment was to restore new confidence in the rule of law. But his procrastination on the economic front put him in jeopardy: Given his country's staggering internal and foreign debt, capital flight and 1,000-percent inflation, Draconian austerity was clearly in order. Finally, last month, he took the painful economic steps necessary to reverse the mounting damage. The creation of a new currency, the pledge not to print it in excess of President Alfonsin may be lucky.

His new policy will not, in any case, drastically reduce living standards, as some Argentines have charged: It will merely eliminate the illusions of wealth created by hyperinflation.

I brought back this picture: An erstwhile proud nation, now impoverstwhile proud nation, now impoverished but volatile, is taking its first steps in democracy. It still lacks a firm system of institutions and parties, but it enjoys superb presidential leadership. The problem is that by their nature, crisis management and civilized political compromise work at cross-purposes. The question is: Will the unruly, impatient Argentine people grant their democratic government enough confidence to steer them through this hard passage?

Belt-tightening is necessary but not sufficient. Only fresh approaches to the debt problem can redress Argentina's woes. It is the responsibility of Western creditors and institutions to entertain new ideas on how to channel new funds into Latin America including the conversion of part of the debt into investments.

Unfortunately, the United States is sadly distracted — by both the flames in Central America and the administration's efforts to fan them - from the issues that confront key nations of South America. The real battle for security in the hemisphere is being fought in the workplaces, homes and minds of expectant Argentines.

Awaiting Avaiting Takeoff

By Tom Wicker

GENEVA — John Kenneth Galbraith, the American economist, evoked the only spontaneous outburst of applause at an international colloquium on nuclear war and nuclear proliferation that con-cluded in Geneva Sunday. Mr. Galbraith, mildly rebuking a militantly anti-Soviet speech by Richard Perle a Reagan administration nuclear expert, observed that the conference would not "get far on the assumption that one side is completely wrong and

Mr. Perle had been no more one. sided than Soviet representatives, no. tably Anatoli Gromyko of the Soviet Academy of Sciences and Georgi Ar batov, director of the Institute of U.S.A. and Canada Studies. Mr. Galbraith took them to task, too, primar-ily for their insistence that the United States had used atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki not just to end World War II but primarily to intimidate Moscow and keep Soviet armies out of the war in Asia.

Lewis Dunn, assistant director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, produced what appeared to be the most negative and meeting when in its last hour he gave a flat "no" — speaking, he said, for himself and the Reagan administration - to the question whether he would support an "immediate moratorium" on nuclear testing.

Mr. Dunn was only repeating established Reagan administration policy, and his reasons - the "question of verification" and the priority the administration gives to deep cuts in existing nuclear weaponry — had been stated before. But he had been preceded by David Owen, the former British foreign secretary, who un-equivocally supported a moratorium on testing and stated his belief that it could be adequately verified.

Mr. Dunn was followed by A.A. Kokoshkin, a deputy to Mr. Arbatov, who said that Moscow "already has made such a proposal" and that agreement on a moratorium would improve Soviet-U.S. relations and the prospects for other arms control. Mr. Dunn's bald response not only accented the generally negative impression that he and Mr. Perle made on a group representing mostly Euro-pean and Third World nations. It also joited the hopes of some that the superpowers might take steps to head off further "horizontal proliferation" — the acquisition of nuclear weapons by nations not now possessing them. Those hopes, however unrealistic. clearly centered on a test moratorium leading to a comprehensive test ban treaty. Mr. Owen said Pakistan was now so close to its first nuclear test that it probably could be stopped only by "an immediate agreement to a moratorium on testing," followed by a comprehensive test ban treaty signed by the five nuclear states.

Ambassador Jayantha Dhanapala of Sri Lanka said such a treaty or steps toward this as an earnest of good faith" would be the best evidence that the nuclear powers were doing their part in observance of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. Without such proof of efforts to stem "vertical proliferation" — the expansion of nuclear arsenals — it was often predicted here, horizontal pro-liferation to Pakistan and India, Iraq and Libya, perhaps North and South Korea, was only a matter of time.

The discussions, organized by Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, were unofficial, under the sponsoiship of the private Groupe de Bellerive. But they acquired a tone of urgency ow-ing to the coming Third Review Con-ference of the 126 nations that have signed the Nonproliferation Treaty. Much will be heard at that conference, to convene in Geneva in September, about the failure of the siperpowers to meet their obligations under its Article VI, which requires them to "pursue negotiations in good faith" on a cessation of the arms race. nuclear disarmament and "general and complete disarmament. Despite Article VI, as Ambassador Dhanapala pointed out, there has been "escalation of the arms race involving the realm of outer space," armaments expenditure is running at $1,000 billion per annum," are an estimated 50,000 nuclear war-heads" and "every year nuclear test; are conducted (43 by the U.S.A. and the U.S.S.R. in 1984 alone)."

The superpowers are not even close to observing Article VI, which might have some restraining effect on horizontal proliferation. So the review conference in September, like the Groupe de Bellerive colloquium, is likely to consider evidence that both kinds of proliferation will continue. The New York Times.

Don't Appease Khomeini

I disagree with Robin Wright ("The Case for Talking With Iran," June 25), who says that Iranians are prepared to "endure further hardships to protect their Islamic form of government." Despite fears of extreme reprisals, the Iranian people took to the streets in the thousands on May 17, at the request of Shahpur Bakhtiar, to say peacefully to the entire world that they are sick and tired of the Khomeini regime.

I further disagree with the writer's statement that Khomeinism is certain to survive Ayatollah Khomeini, and with her prescription that the West should attempt a rapprochement with him. She should remember that terrorism has paid high dividends for the Islamic Republic. In Lebanon, two fanatics, two trucks and perhaps $50,000 worth of explosives forced a superpower to withdraw with a bloody nose. Cossiga's Anti-Terrorist Campaign As Minister Brought Personal Grief

ROME - The most famous and most moving photograph of Francesco Cossiga, who is being sworn in as Italy's new president Wednesday, has reappeared in the iziian press.

It was taken more than seven wears ago on a cold, rainy day and shows him bareheaded, a hand cov-ering his face and hiding his tears, standing alone against the flowercovered tomb of former Prime Minister Aldo Moro, his friend and mentor who had been killed a few tays earlier by the Red Brigades.

Mr. Cossiga had been absent from the funeral, banished like all other politicians by Moro's widow who blamed him and the government for her husband's death.

He became the pet hate of the far-left movements that had sprung up to the left of the Communist Party and whose main objective was to disrupt the growing cooperation between the Communists and the Christian Democrats that Moro and Enrico Berlinguer, the Communist Party chief who died last year, sought to bring about.

The extreme left accused Mr. Cossign of acting in concert, almost in conspiracy with, the Communist Party's own "law-and-order" man, Ugo Pecchioli. His name, misspelled Kossiga, the double "S" drawn in the form of the symbol of the Nazi SS, appeared on thousands of walls. An official of his ministry or-dered as many of these graffiti photographed as was possible. The collection, filling three volumes, was presented to Mr. Cossiga as a gift. After Moro's abduction, Mr. Cossign voted with the majority of the ministers to refuse all negotiation with the guerrillas who demanded the release of imprisoned Red Brigades leaders as a condition for Moro's release.

The government's position was emphatically backed by the Communists. Only the Socialists of the current prime minister, Bettino Craxi, then not in the government, advocated negotiations with the Red Brigades. Friends said that Mr. Cossign was wracked by doubt and perhaps remorse as soon as he had concurred in the decision not to try to save Mr. Moro through negotia-tion. But his doubt remained pri-

What he did betray was his bitterness at being frustrated at every turn, in spite of a huge police dragnet, in all his efforts to find a trace of his captive friend.

On the day after Moro's body was found in an abandoned car near the headquarters of the Christian Democratic and Communis headquarters, Mr. Cossiga said: "From this moment you must con-sider me politically dead."

The next day he resigned, the only minister to do so, taking full personal responsibility for what had happened. His resignation was an extraordinary occurrence in the history of Italian politics. But in 1979 after Parliament re-

Mr. Cossiga, despite the mutual respect between the two men, remarked about the family tie: "I don't know who should feel more embarrassed, he or I."

Europeans Send Aloft Satellite to Meet Comet

By Thomas O'Toole Wushington Post Service

WASHINGTON - The European Space Agency launched Tuesday its Giotto spacecraft on the first leg of an eight-month journey that will take it to a rendezvous with Halley's comet between the sun and the Earth in March 1986. The launch from the Kourou Space Center on French Guiana on the northeastern coast of South America was the ninth straight success for the European agency's unmanned Ariane-1 rocket.

Placed by Ariane in a "parking orbit" 22,300 miles (36,152 kilometers) above the equator, the 2,112pound (958-kilogram) spacecraft will use an onboard "kick" motor to move it out of Earth orbit on Wednesday into what engineers call the "cruise" phase toward deep

Giotto is not expected to survive beyond the encounter distance, where it will be sandblasted by billions of high speed dust particles pouring off the comet's nucleus.

The Giotto spacecraft gets its name from Giotto di Bondone, a 14th-century artist who witnessed an apparition in 1301 of what turned out to be Halley's comer The Florentine painter was so impressed by the comet that he made it the "Star of Bethlehem" in a fresco he called the "Adoration of MOSCOW - Eduard A. Shevardnadze, the Georgian Communist Party leader who was chosen to succeed Andrei A. Gromyko as foreign minister, has a reputation domestically as an articulate party of-ficial in the mold of Mikhail S.

■ Washington Reacts

U.S. officials said Tuesday that the naming of Mr. Gromyko as president had cleared the way for Mr. Gorbachev to take over control of Moscow's foreign policy, United Press International reported from Washington.

The Soviet moves came about the same time as an announcement in Washington that Mr. Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev would meet, for the first time, in a three-day session Nov. 19-21 in Geneva, the site of nuclear arms talks.

The White House and the State Department had no official comment on the Gromyko move.

But some U.S. officials said Mr. Gromyko was, in essence, "kicked upstairs" and that Mr. Gorbachev now was in a position to take over foreign policy. Mr. Giromyko's role will be ceremonial, one official said. "But it's not clear whether he'll maintain his influence in foreign policy."

The U.S. chief delegate to the United Nations, Vernon A. Walters, commenting on Mr. Gromyko's elevation on television, said: think it is a reward for long and faithful service to a very ornamental job."

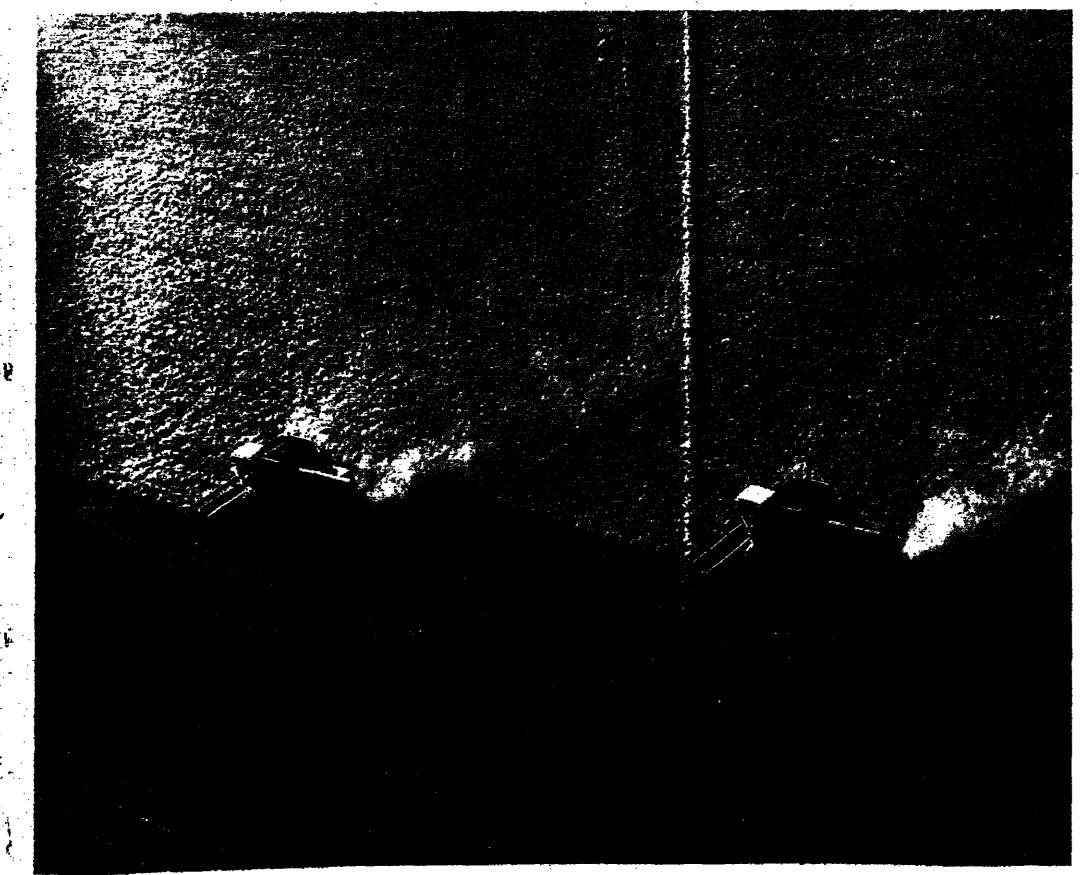

Mr. Walters, asked if the move represented any loss of power for Mr. Gorbachev, said: "No. I think the fact that Gorbachev could make him president, could secure his approval as president, could secure a number of other changes in the Politburo, is an indication that Gorbachev is getting his power base firmly settled."

Officials said Mr. Shevardnadze's experience was "limited in Moscow and in foreign policy" but they added that he was bright" and "attractive in dealing with other people."

Secretary of State George P. Shultz will be able to size him up at a Helsinki meeting soon, on the 10th anniversary of the Helsinki accords on European security and human rights, officials said.

Hostages Saw Hijackers Dupe Airport Security

By Michael Wines Los Angeles Times Service WIESBADEN, West Germany

With incredible luck, two Lebanese hijackers duped security guards and devices before hijack-ing TWA Flight 847 on June 14, according to two passengers from Indianapolis who said they witnessed the entire affair.

An account of the two men's maneuvers was provided Monday by James W. Hoskins Jr., 22, who was among those just freed, and his girlfriend, Kathryn A. Davis, 21, who was among the women passengers released in Algeria. The two said that they moved through the Athens Airport security procedures immediately ahead of the two hijackers.

"They were right behind us, and I made the comment to Kathy that they both looked strange," Mr. Hoskins said, "One guy was really very edgy and the other guy was very calm.

"As we went through, we put our bags down to run through the X-ray machine, and the guy stuffed his bags in between our bags, and it ran through that way.

"I thought that was a little strange at the time," he said, "and I made the comment to him that he'd better back off. I'm glad I didn't get much stronger than

The problem with Clarke Peters as Sky Masterson is not (as one of my colleagues asserts) that he is black; one of the best "Guys and Dolls" I ever saw had a black cast. The problem is that his Sky is an impressive solo show that has in no way been integrated with what is going on around him. Granted, he is not given much help by Betsy Brantley, who as Sarah Brown gives a reasonably adequate understudy performance until you look at the program and realize that she is not the understudy.

There is really only one moment where this "Guys and Dolls" even begins to recapture the dignity and intelligence and distinction of its original National staging. That is when John Warner (though himself also a newcomer) does the heartmake you still more aware of what you have been missing in the rest of

In Bulgaria, Private Plots Aid Incentive (And Harvest)

By David Binder New York Times Service

ANDANSKI, Bulgaria — The most star-ding aspect of Bulgaria's Communist sys-tem of agriculture is the extent to which private farmers are involved.

This was evident on a recent Sunday in the fields alongside Route 2, the modern highway that leads south from Solia, the capital, to the frontier of Greece. The fields in the fertile Stru-ma Valley have been plowed by tractors belong-ing to one of Bulgaria's relatively new agro-industrial complexes. But they have also been divided into small plots that are at the disposal of individual cooperative farmers to use as they

Now on weekends they can be found, hundreds of them, hoeing rows of potatoes and other vegetables. But there the resemblance to their forebears ends. They have driven to these fields in their own four-door compact cars, and when they are done they may stop by the village tavern or drive to a wedding.

According to Professor Todor Pandov, first deputy chairman of the Bulgarian Academy of Agriculture, the amount of land set aside for private use, 1,729,770 acres (696,949 hectares). represents "13 to 14 percent" of the total under cultivation. He noted that "27 to 28 percent of total output is from private plots."

The growth of these private-farm undertakings becomes evident when these figures are compared with earlier statistics. Two years ago, for example, the amount of land in private plots was 1,606,215 acres, according to a dispatch by the Bulgarian Telegraph Agency, and the output from them amounted to 25 percent of the coun-

"But it is not all private," Professor Pandov said in an interview in Sofia, "because the farmers got fodder, fertilizer and the use of machines from the state for their private plots."

In other words, the Communist government is directly fostering the private undertakings of the farmers, but on the foundation of what is now a powerful public agricultural sector. In 1982, for example, individual farmers were provided with 96,000 sows and 361,000 piglets to tend for their own use. Similar distributions are made of second-crop fruit and vegetables, including corn and raspberries.

According to the professor, a er may cultivate a maximum of about 10 acres (4 hectares) and use an additional 3.7 acres of pasture. This would represent nearly twice the average amount of land available to Bulgaria's 1,400,000 peasants before World War II, and may explain why the Communist collectiviza-percent of the population is engaged in farming.

Yet for Bulgaria, where 80 percent of the population was directly dependent on farming for its livelihood until 1944, the shift in agriculture has been almost cataclysmic.

For a quarter of a century after the 1944 Communist takeover, under the guns of the invading Red Army, Bulgaria's agriculture was run on the Soviet model: 100 percent collectivization, followed by "unification" of collective units, with mechanized services provided by of products to the government. In addition, large state farms were established for stock Then, in 1970, the government ordered "the beginning of integration of agricultural production and food processing," to combine functions that were previously separate — growing pro-cessing and marketing, Professor Pandov said. Specifically, the first 200 agro-industrial complexes were formed, averaging 30,000 acres in Altogether, he added, there are 292 "pure" agro-industrial complexes, most of them specializing in particular crops. They average about 12,700 acres, he said, and productivity has risen about 2 percent a year.

German Greens Facing A Crisis of Existence'

By James M. Markham New York Times Service

AGEN, West Germany - In its six years of existence, the Greens party has been living on a roller coaster of electoral expectations.

After two demoralizing drubbings in state elections — first in the Saarland in March and then in North Rhine-Westphalia last month the anti-establishment, anti-nuclear, anti-North Atlantic Treaty Organization party now is at the very bottom of the roller-coaster run, fearful of leaving the rails altogether.

In a chastened, dispirited temper, about 700 mostly youthful delegates of the Greens repaired for a June weekend to the bleak Ruhr rust-belt city of Hagen to contemplate their problematical future. They managed to confirm that they are irreconcilably split between utopians and more-or-less realistic politicians.

The expressions "crisis" and "crisis of exis-tence" echoed for two days in Hagen's utilitatian conference center, which, in contrast to prean contenence center, which in content to pre-vious, ebullient Greens congresses, was not bedecked with the banners of the assorted causes that have coalesced under the party's umbrella Only the anti-vivisectionists draped a painted sheet from the balcony.

As it happened, the opponents of experimenting with animals provided the sole "issue" that was debated at the congress, which some delegates said privately was a commentary on the party's conceptual barrenness. Bizarrely, a delegate's position on how strongly he was opposed to vivisection became a touchstone of how much he was opposed to the real issue before the party: contemplating a governing coalition with the Social Democratic Party.

It was symptomatic of creeping gains by the "Realo," or realist, wing of the Greens, which favors getting into the dirty business of governmental responsibility, that the congress did not endorse an all-out ban on animal experimentation. Votes for this position were solicited from the podium and from a corridor video show that displayed laboratory monkeys wired and squirming wretchedly under electric shocks.

Instead, embracing a Realo view, the congress called modestly for a moratorium on animal testing by the pharmaceutical industry and

This position outraged many members of the fundamentalist, or "Fundi," wing and provoked its guru, an apocalyptic-minded East German exile named Rudolf Bahro, to announce that he was leaving the party. The erstwhile Communist dissident said that the Greens had failed to become an "implement against the spiral of

"You are going the way of a normal party," warned Mr. Bahro, who said he believes that rising unemployment is a positive development that will bring about the collapse of industrial society. "That is not my project."

DETRA Kelly, an American-educated founder of the Greens, lashed out, too, against those who favor coalitions with the left-of-center Social Democrats. She said that coalitions should be formed with East Enropean human rights movements, such as Swords Into Plowshares in East Germany or Charter 77 in Czechoslovakia, or with the ecological activist group Greenpeace, "but not with

We have to make this state system of repression superfluous and not start to repair it. What happens when the Greens start talking about 'the acceptable limits' of dioxin?"

Earlier, sitting among the delegates, Miss Kelly, 37, conceded, "A lot of the people who started with us in 1979 are very depressed." But she said she did not have any plans to abandon the party.

The fundamentalists are an unstable coalition of doctrinal purists, like Miss Kelly, and Marxist-Leminist veterans of defunct groups of the eftist fringe who cut their political teeth in the 1968 European student upheaval. The latter group, strongest in Hamburg, Frankfurt and miration foward the idea of forging a coalition with the Social Democrats. Now in the opposite precariously toward middle age.

Within the party, the Fundis' position has weakened since like-minded commudes in the Saarland and North Rhine-Westphalia - both heavy-industry, high-unemployment states led the Greens into electoral debacles on platforms that spurned coalitions.

The party is irreconcilably split between utopians and more-or-less realistic politicians.

HE Greens won only 2.5 percent of the popular vote in the Saarland and 4.6 percent in North Rhine-Westphaliz less than the 5 percent needed for seats. The Social Democrats won both elections sturningly, assembling unexpected majorities of seats.

Thomas Ebermann, a Marxist Greens leader from Hamburg, acknowledged that he was sur-prised that the Social Democrats had been able to revive their fortunes so quickly, partly by appropriating the Greens' concern for an endangered environment. The Social Democrats' new slogan is, "Jobs and Environment."

Mr. Ebermann said that a showdown between the Greens' two wings was inevitable before the 1987 elections. "Everybody knows that before the Bundestag elections, someone must win," I said. "But everyone knows that it win't happer this weekend."

His prediction was fulfilled. The Realo wing pleaded for what Waltraud Schoppe, a Bundes-tag member, called "a clear coantion declara-tion" that would make voters know that ballots for the Greens could be translated into results.

But the delegates, fearful of an open split, finally approved a Reale-timed compromise resolution that kept open all options from opposition to governing alone," including coali-tions, but that condemned "striving to come to power at almost any price."

For the Greens, the so "Without ministers, without coalitions, we the state of Lower Saxony, which will have congress, there was manimous accord among Fundis and Realos that failure to retain seats in Lower Saxony would be fatal to the Greens chances in the 1987 general elections.

U.S. Anthropologist Contrasts Black, White Approaches to Power, Politics and Sex

By Juan Williams Washington Past Service

ASHINGTON — Blacks and whites have sharply contrasting approaches to politics, power and sex but often fail to recognize it, according to a German-American anthropologist, who is white, This failure leads to misunderstandings between individuals and to a growing divergence between the black and white communities, said Thomas Kochman of the University of Illinois at Chicago. A Kochman example: The Reverend Jesse L. Jackson is speaking at corps. a political rally. He starts out by chanting, "I am somebody!" Mr. Kochman sees whites in the audience frown. He feels himself pull back.

"I can't believe that academics, black colleagues of mine, can stand up and start shouting, clapping." Mr. Kochman said. "In my gut I'm shocked. I'm not used to being brought into a scene that way."

He suggests that a white audience equates emotional involvement with loss of control; such scenes raise the specter of demagoguery to whites - they suspect that a highly charged speaker is trying to manipulate them. From the black perspective, he said, the impact is very

"The sister who faints at the Baptist revival never seems to lose her glasses, so how much control is lost?" he asked. Blacks are accustomed to dealing with high-energy speakers and are able to look beyond the style to the substance of the message, he says,

How Some Firms Handle Stress of Transfer Abroad

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

ARIS - Executives going abroad generally receive salary increases, depending on the location of their new job, cost-of-living adjustments, relocation premiums and housing and school allowances.

that according to a recent study of managers of major corporations: the attrition rate among executives working abroad is high energy to show that added creature comforts may not be enough to keep them happy. Between 5 and 30 percent, depending on the company, of U.S. executives working overseas go home before the and of their assignments, said the study, by the University of Pendalivania's Wharton School. Ten percent of European executives working abroad leave before the end of their assignments.

For an overseas assignment to be successful, companies have to choose the right person for the job, give adequate briefing and training, provide support during the overseas assignment and make provisions for reintegrating managers back at

Some multinationals do nothing at all, others are trying to do a bit more. Here are some of the things being done:

A major problem is the failure of the family to adapt abroad.

• Selecting the adaptable executive. In addition to the traditional interview, some U.S. companies are using a selection test for executives going abroad, called the Overseas Assignment Inventory (OAI). The test, which has not been marketed in Europe yet, measures a person's adaptability to a foreign environment. It looks at a person's attitude about other ethnic groups, patience and interpersonal skills as well as their motivations and expectations about an

HE test was developed by Moran, Stahl & Boyer Inc. of Boulder, Colorado. It has long been used by the U.S. Navy and the Peace Corps and was introduced to U.S. compamies three years ago. Moran, Stahl & Boyer charges a company

$1,500 for certification and $140 per person for the test.

"It's a good screening device," said Dan Copeland, in charge of expatriates at General Dynamics Services Co. in Fort Worth, Texas, a subsidiary of the huge U.S. defense contractor. "I haven't ruled out anybody because of it, but I came close a couple of times." Mr. Copeland cannot link a low overseas attrition rate directly to the use of the test. "But it's good enough for me to keep using it," he said.

• Sticking with career expatriates. Some companies in Britain recruit managers specifically interested in international careers. Often these career expatriates had parents who worked abroad. Because they know what to expect from an international assignment, they may represent a lower risk. Out of the 5,400 expatriates working for the Royal Dutch Shell Group, 2,100 are career

BAT Industries PLC, the British food and tobacco group, has a similar recruitment pattern. In the last eight years, according to BAT, only two career expatriates who stayed with BAT decided to change from an international to a domestic career. "To redirect their careers in the organization is not easy because we don't anticipate they will change horses," said John Wilburn, manager of expatriate affairs at BAT.

Interviewing the spouse. "The failure of the family to adapt is the number one reason for the failure of international assignments," said Paul Evans, professor of organizational behavior at the European Institute of Business Administration in Fontaine-bleau, France, and co-author of "Must Success Cost So Much." Some companies such as Volvo AB, the diversified Swedish car company, interview the spouse along with the executive being offered a job overseas. For some Scandinavian and U.S. companies where dua career families are increasing, interviewing the spouse is essential. About 90 percent of our managers going abroad are dual-career families," said Anders Sondeleus, vice-president in charge of (Continued on Page 15, Col. 4)

The per-share figure fell to 14.2 pence from 14.9 pence the year

Analysis had been expecting pre-tax profit of £730 million to £750 million for the year.

Volume for the year rose 6.8 per-cent to £5.98 billion from £5.6 billion, the company said in its pre-liminary report for the year.

In trading Tuesday on the London Stock Exchange, GEC's stock closed at 166 pence, unchanged from Monday.

GEC's preliminary statement contained no detailed comments. The annual report of the company, which is not connected with General Electric Co. of the United States,

In the first of two new May reports that seemed to point to a rebounding U.S. economy, the Commerce Department said orders of manufactured goods advanced for the first time in four months.

It said such orders totaled $195.1 billion in May, a $4-billion gain from April and the largest increase since a 4.4-percent rise in November. The gain followed declines of 0.3 percent in April, 0.8 percent in March and 0.9 percent in February.

The gain in housing sales was the biggest increase in eight months. It reversed much of an 11.5-percent decline in April. It was the largest increase since a 20.3-percent jump last September.

The May gain left sales of new single-family homes at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 676,000. Many analysts are predicting further sales gains in the months ahead, spurred by substantial de-clines in mortgage interest rates.

Although Hutton has contended that two unnamed middle-level managers were partly responsible for excessive overdrafts, the firm has appointed former Griffin B. Bell, a former U.S. attorney general and now a private attorney in At-lanta, to conduct his own review and make public a report later this

Dollar Higher In New York; Gold Steady

NEW YORK - Higher short-term interest rates and evidence of U.S. economic strength helped the dollar move higher against most major cur-rencies Tuesday. Trading was thin before Thursday's U.S. Independence Day holiday and Friday's meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries in Vienna.

Late New York prices and comparable Monday rates in-cluded: 2.5440 Swiss francs, down from 2.5520; 3.0400 Deutsche marks, down from 3.0460; 9.2650 French francs, up from 9.2625; 1940.50 Italian lire, up from 1936.00 and 248.05 Japanese yen, unchanged.

The pound was at $1.3075, up from $1.3045 on Monday. Republic National Bank closed gold at $310.25 an ounce, up from $309.75 Monday.

The bank approved three loans totaling $92.5 million to Yugoslavia for use in expanding natural gas production as the bank's fiscal year ended, the spokesman, Thomas A. Blinkhorn, also announced. The reduction in World Bank loans stemmed both from declining contributions from some donor countries and the growing rejuctance of poorer nations to assume new debts.

Car Output Schedules For U.S. Exceed 1984

DETROIT - With the continned support of a robust market, the a year earlier. _U.S. automobile industry is scheduling production of new cars in the said, manufacturers will build second half of 1985 ahead of last about 8.16 million cars in 1985, a 5year's strong pace, industry sources

Sales of American-built cars in 1979, when slightly more than 8.4 the first half of this year exceeded million cars were built. the first half of this year exceeded last year's rate and would have been even stronger but for a drop in output at General Motors Corp. where strikes late in 1984 disrupted operations and had after-effects industry's weakest because of the that carried over into this year. Industry sources said GM has scheduled U.S. production of neary 300,000 more cars in the last half of 1985 than it did a year earlier, For the industry as a whole this will more than offset lower output planned by Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp.

GM, the sources said, expects car comput of 2.244,000 units for the second half of this year, up 14.5 percent from the 1,960,000 built a vear earlier.

Ford projects its car production in the last six months of 1985 at 702,000 units. 17.4 percent fewer than last year's 850,000.

Chrysler expects to be roughly even with last year's second-half production, with plans to build $44,000 cars, off 2.3 percent from 1984's 557,000 units.

Adding production by smaller combanies such as American Motors Corp., Volkswagen of America, American Honda, Nissan and the new United Motor partnership of Toyota and GM, U.S.-based companies are expected to build vided on the outlook for 1986.

Toyota Says It May Open Own U.S. Plant

TOKYO - Toyota Motor Corp. is considering opening a wholly owned car plant in the United States but has not decided on details, a company spokesman said Monday.

Nihon Kerzai Shimbun, a daily Japanese business newspaper, reported that Toyota is looking for land in the American Midwest to open a factory by mid-1988 to make 200,000 cars a year of 2,000 to 2,600 cubic centimeter engine capaci-ty, which would be in the compact range, turning later to standard-size cars with a capacity of 3,000 to 4,000 cubic centi-

Toyota and General Motors: Corp. already have announced plans to make up to 200,000 cars a year for 12 years in a 50-50 joint venture at a former GM factory in Fremont, Cali-

BNOC Stops Purchasing Oil Under Participation Pacts

LONDON - British National Oil Corp., the government-owned oil-trading company, said Tuesday that it had arranged with its suppli-ers to stop buying virtually all the oil to which it was formerly entitled under its participation agreements. The British government is gradually closing down BNOC and returning its functions to the private sec-

Until early this year, BNOC was obliged to buy 51 percent of all British oil output, now averaging around 2.7 million barrels a day. However, it has been reducing its commitments ahead of the abolition planned for BNOC later in

A spokesman for BNOC said it would not set a price for July deliveries from its suppliers. Its last price was $26.65 a barrel for June diveries of its main Brent Field day under these arrangements. Under the procedures, small, independent producers with no marketing facilities of their own sell the corporation their full output, not simply the 51 percent due under the participation agreements.

In recent discussions with County Bank Ltd. and the stockbrokerage of Field, Newson-Smith over the proposed formation of a North Sea oil-marketing cooperative to replace BNOC functions, some small producers said they intended to continue their marketing arrangements with a BNOC succes-

But the government has said the planned government-owned oil and pipelines agency, which is due to replace BNOC, would not act as an agent for small producers that currently sell their output through BNOC.

The spokesman said the suspension of oil acquisitions under par-ticipation agreements applied also to liquefied petroleum gas, for which BNOC formerly set quarter-

Mesa to Report Gain on Unocal Fight

By Nancy Rivera

Los Angeles Times Service
LOS ANGELES — Countering predictions that it would lose miions Mesa Petroleum Co. said Monday that it will report an $83million after-tax gain on its thwarted bid to take over Unocal Corp. for the second quarter, ended June Analysts had predicted that an investor group led by Mesa and its chairman, T. Boone Pickens, would have a loss of between $40 million and $60 million because of the enormous costs of trying to take over the oil company, based here. Mesa has denied that it would show a loss since the battle with Unocal ended in late May.

Under the settlement, Unocal was to buy back about one-third of its stock with securities valued at $72 per share. In exchange, the its 7.8 million Unocal shares for Mesa II Partners investor group agreed to end its takeover attempt and to vote its remaining shares sale of stock. As a result, a large with the majority of other Uuocal portion of the value of the notes

Instead of losing money, Mesa Petroleum, which accounted for more than 90 percent of the investor group, could earn more than $83 million if the price of Unocal's stock rises, said Sidney Tassin, assistant to the financial vice president at Mesa. On the New York Stock Exchange, Unocal's stock closed Monday at $29.75, up 50

Executives at Mesa, based in Amarillo, Texas, believe that the price of Unocal's stock will rise, specially in light of a master limited partnership that Unocal is forming, Mr. Tassin said.
Mesa achieved a profit from the hostile, three-month takeover battle by making a gain on the sale of its Unocal notes and through some clever tax accounting. The tax strategy will allow Mesa to realize about $200 million in benefits from a sizable capital loss to be recorded in 1986 when Mesa sells its remaining 14.6 million Unocal shares:

notes with a $565-million face value as a dividend rather than as a will be taxed at the more favorable corporate dividend rate. Mesa has sold the notes for $589.4 million, a roughly $255-million gain over the cost of acquiring shares.

Mesa is treating the exchange of the shares it has exchanged will be combined with the tax basis of the 14.6 million Unocal shares that it still owns.

The result, Mr. Tassin said, would be a "very big" capital loss that could be used to offset part of the capital gains from Mesa's previous takeover attempts for a net benefit of about $200 million.

Mesa also is writing off about $60 million in expenses in the second quarter, plus roughly $300 million because it marked its 14.6 million Unocal shares down to the current market value of about $29

"It sounds to me like pretty fancy footwork," said Bruce Lazier, an analyst with Prescott, Ball & Turben. "I think it might be something that the IRS might challenge."

M. Craig Schwerdt, an oil industry analyst with Los Angeles-based Morgan, Olmstead, Kennedy & Gardner, said Mesa was "taking their loss and making the taxpayers pick it up."

Mr. Tassin said that Mesa's strategy "isn't some trick that we found in the back of the book. This is described by Unocal on page 15

Group Sets Plan for Channel

LONDON - A Britishbased consortium unveiled on Tuesday a £2-billion ($2.6-billion) plan to construct a twinbore rail tunnel linking the two countries under the English Channel and disclosed French backing.

The chairman of the Channel Tunnel Group, Sir Nicholas Henderson, said the rail system would transport cars and trucks between terminals at Cheriton near Folkestone on the southern English coast and Sangatte near Calais

Shuttle trains would leave every five minutes and the trip would last 30 minutes, he said. The consortium said the link would take four and a half years to build.

Channel Tunnel, which is led by the British contractors Cos-tain, Tarmac, Taylor Woodrow and Wimpey, said it had been joined by five French construction companies and three

The contractors were identified as Bouygues, Dumez, So-ciété Auxiliare d'Entreprises, Société Generale d'Entreprises and Spie Batignolles, and the banks as Credit Lyonnais, Banque Indosuez and Banque Nationale de Paris.

Proposals for the tunnel are due Oct. 31. The British and French governments are to select a plan before the end of the year, and construction is expected to begin in 1986. Channel Tunnel's principal rival is Euroroute Ltd., another Anglo-French consortium.

Exxon to Appeal Order to Refund

WASHINGTON - Exxon Corp. said Tuesday that it will appeal a ruling by a special federal court ordering it to pay $1.9 billion in refunds and interest for overpricing crude oil from a Texas field.

An Exxon spokesman, Henry Beathard, said the world's largest company would file a motion asking the Temporary Emergency Court of Appeals to reconsider its ruling. In Houston, S. J. Reso, Exxon executive vice president, said the case should not have been decided without a trial.

The court, appointed to resolve disputes over federal price controls that existed in the 1970s, upheld on Monday a 1983 federal court ruling ordering Exxon to pay $895 million for overpricing oil from its Hawkins field near Tyler, Texas.

The union said the agreement WASHINGTON - The Air requires concessions to run through Line Pilots Association, stepping the year 1988, and provides that the up its efforts to thwart a TWA Inc. members of all the TWA unions takeover bid by Texas Air Corp., receive 20 percent of TWA comgranted pay and benefit conces- mon stock and profits. The pilots sions Tuesday to Carl C. Icahn to said that in return they would resupport his competing bid for the ceive a share of the 20 percent of the TWA common stock.

The union said they believe the concessions will allow Mr. Icahn to acquire TWA on terms more favorable to shareholders than those offered by Texas Air.

The source said that under the agreement the unions would end up with a 20-percent ownership of a privately held company headed by Mr. Icahn, and would receive 20 percent of the company's profits. A spokesman for the union ex-plained, "we don't like [Texas Air Chairman] Frank Lorenzo," citing his part in having Continental Air-lines seek protection from its creditors under federal bankruptcy laws and rescinding agreements with pi-lots and other unions.

American Express Is Shifting Focus

If Mesa holds its Unocal stock

ble a giant American Express traveler's check that bears - as do the real checks -- Mr. Gerstner's signa-

"We're a hard-working crew," he said, in an interview the day after his promotion. "But we take that in stride. And we are positioned better than any other company to take advantage of where the industry is going. We have a clear consumer franchise. We are accepted as a deliverer of high-quality financial services, and we've got entrepre-neurial management that can react quickly and is capable of taking risk in a changing marketplace."
Perhaps the biggest decision before American Express's top management will be how to invest the proceeds from the sale of Fireman's Fund and from its share in Warner Amex, a money-losing cable-television venture. Wall Street is keeping a close watch. "The big question is what will they do with that money," said June Hoffer, an analyst with Prudential-Bache Securities. "They seem to have no plans for the short term." The company said last week that it would sell most of Fireman's Fund's troubled property and casualty business in a stock offering that analysts estimate could bring in $1.8 billion, potentially one of the largest initial stock offerings

Additional money should come in from Warner Amex. Mr. Gerstner said the company will re-ceive notice "within a week" from its partner, Warner Communications, on whether Warner will buy American Express's stake or whether the entire joint venture will be sold to someone else. An earlier rumored buyer - a joint endeavor of Time Inc. and Tele-Communications Inc. — was said to have of-fered $750 million in cash and the assumption of $500 million in debt. But there have been no further indications that the agreement will go through. One thing is clear: American Express is not planning major acquisitions comparable to the big-ticket companies it purchased in the past two years. During that period, it acquired the venerable Wall Street firm Lehman Brothers Kuhn Loeb for $360 million; it paid $727 milhon for Minneapolis-based IDS Financial Services, a marketer of personal financial-planning products, and it bought Trade Development Bank, a Swiss-based private bank, for $520 million. The purchases are still being blended into the company, some more smoothly than others, cooling acquisition fever. And the experience with Warner Amex has been sobering. "With the bene-fit of hindsight, that was not a good investment," Mr. Gerstner said.

"We've got no current plans to make any acquisitions," he said. "We went through a tough-minded strategic review over the last six months, and we're very pleased making and working alone, Mr. those who say the card cannot exwith the hand we've got in the financial-services poker game. I porate projects and teamwork. The markable growth; its earnings have don't see any major niches that we will have to fill with acquisitions."

Still, he left the door open: "This company will always be opportunist and entrepreneurial and I'm sure we'd do an acquisition if something extraordinary came around." But the first priority in spending the money, he said, will be to invest in the company's existing business-es and to restructure its balance sheet by retiring some debt and buying back some stock. Such a move could win favor with investors. "I would prefer that there be no more acquisitions," said Miss Hoffer of Prudential-Bache. "Analysts like to see a buyback of For two years, decisions like hese have fallen to Mr. Gerstner,

Mr. Weill and Mr. Robinson, who formed the company's policy committee, similar to an office of the chief executive. This troiks passed No. I, Mr. Robinson oversaw IDS. Mr. Gerstner, No. 3, was chief executive of the Travel Related Scrvices subsidiary — credit cards, traveler's checks and travel agencies. He was also assigned responsi-bility for Warner Amer.

The offices of the three were within shouting distance of one another, which fostered fluid policy making. The three men collaborated on major decisions and often socialized in their off-hours. But during the course of this year, Mr. Gerstner's role started to expand. Already the company's chief strategist, he took over the corporate finance functions — tax, treasury, accounting and auditing — from with people. "Lou is the perfect guy for American Express, especially since the firm is getting out of the deal business," said a investment banker close to the company. "They've accumulated a significant pile of assets, but they have not integrated them. They don't need a guy doing deals. They need someone with a management focus,"

Mr. Gerstner, who is generally described as a quick study, was on a fast track at McKinsey. He made partner in a mere four years, two or three less than the norm and, while still a young associate, led the firm's financial-services group.

Closest to Mr. Gerstner's heart is Travel Related Services. It is the heartbeat of American Express as well, the biggest and most profiton all big corporate decisions. For Import Effort

The Associated Press

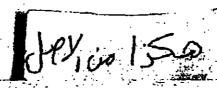

TOKYO — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone on Tnesday identified five target areas for the government's program to open Japanese markets to imports, an official said.

Mr. Nakasone urged ministers at a cabinet meeting to speed up their search for changes that can be made in road and transport regulations, the acceptance of foreign testing data, food and sanitation rules, quarantine procedures and testing data, food and sanitation rules, quarantine procedures and electric appliance regulations, said an official in his office who declined to be named.

The changes are aimed at simplifying obstacles other than tariff barriers that have been cited by Japan's trading partners, the first said. Japan announced tariff cuts line 25 on more than 1,800 cuts June 25 on more man 1,800

Lloyds Bank Selects Tokyo For Its Asian Headquarters

By Colin Chapman

LONDON - Lloyds Bank PLC. inch decided against seeking trust work status in Japan - leaving the propess field to Barclays Bank P.C. and the two leading Swiss lands — and Thesday that it would set up a new Asian headorganis for its interpational divi-

The new office, responsible for (1) branches and representative offices in the Asia-Pacific region, will be beauted by Michael Riding, cur-rends emicipal manager of the Far Fast Marking in London, who becomes general manager, Michael Georg, currently regional manager, Southeast Asia, will be deputy gen-eral manager. The new office is expected to be in place next fall. Kleinwort, Benson, Lonsdale Ricate holding company of the Kleinwort Benson merchant bank-ing group, has appointed Sir David Steel, chairman of the Wellcome Trust and former chairman of BP PLC, and Andrew Rutherford, senior partner of stockbrokers Grievesor Grant, to the board. Grimoess. Mahors and Co., the London merchant bank, has appointed Alan Broughton executive director in charge of treasury operations. Mr. Broughton, who replaces Fraser Jennings, was for-merly head of European treasury operations for the Royal Bank of Canada, prior to which he was managing director of the Orion Bank. Mr. Jennings is to take up a new post as managing director of Guinness Mahon Securities.

J. Henry Schroder Wagg & Co. has incorporated its investment division as a separate company called Schroder Investment Management Ltd. and has appointed G.H. Po-pham as chairman and LP. Sedgwick as chief executive.

Vickers da Costa Ltd., the Loudon stockbroker, has named J.D. Paulson-Ellis as chairman, succeeding Sir Kenneth Berrill, who has to become chairman of the government's Securities and Invest-

Finding a job for the spouse. Some U.S. companies such as Bristol Myers Co. and Citicorp help spouses of executives going overseas find jobs. But most European multinationals still don't think it is their business to look for a job for the spouse. "We have two couples, where all four are working for Shell Bank of New Zealand has apwith jobs overseas in the same loca-tion," said Barbara Fordred of Shell International. "But is it the. responsibility of the company to look for a job for a spouse (who isn't with Shell)?"

Kuwait Endorses Plan to Support Banks With Government Deposits

KUWAIT - The cabinet endorsed a plan Tuesday to help banks and investment houses recover from a debt crisis caused by the collapse of the unregulated Souk al-Manakh stock market in 1982. The minister for cabinet affairs, Rashid al-Rashid, said the government would deposit funds in banks to boost liquidity in the financial sector, the Kuwait News Agency reported. The stock market crash left investors holding more than $90 billion in mostly worthless postdated checks and caused a severe economic recession.

The report did not indicate how much aid the government would provide. Mr. al-Rashid said the plan would be administered by the Central Bank of Kuwait.

The newspaper Al-Qabas reported last week that the plan included a credit package of $1.65 billion. Banking sources said the figure could

Mr. Rashid said the plan would be referred to the National Assembly for approval. The repercussions of the 1982 crash became most evident last year, when a significant outflow of capital prompted the Central Bank to stem the flight of money. The bank took a tough stance, including higher provisions, a decline in assets and lower published profits and

The government also approved a bill calling for settlement of share dealings to limit bankrupicies. In April, the state-controlled Kuwaiti Investment Co. reported a 1984 loss of 32.3 million dinars (about $10.7 million), 66 percent more than in 1983.

ATHOS, THE HOLY MOUNTAIN

By Philip Sherrard. Photographs by Takis Zervoulakos, 176 pages, $27.95 The Overlook Press, 12 West 21st Street. New York, N. Y. 10010.

Reviewed by John J. Yiannias

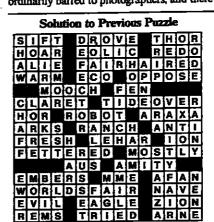

F you, like me, think the character of Zorba 1 has done more to distort the popular image of Greece than any other bit of hype in memory, you will find the proportions restored by ulip Sherrard's sensitive book about the Holy Mountain.

Athos is a wooded peninsula in northern Greece, very beautiful in a wild way, about 35 miles (55 kilometers) long and 2 to 5 miles wide, ending in a bare, whitish mountain that rises out of the Aegean Sea to a height of 6.500 feet (1.980 meters). Twenty monasteries and scores of monastic habitations bearing other names — sketes, kelba, kalyvia, hesychasteria. kathismata — are scattered about, on the shores or high above them, built into the cliff-faces, nestled inland. A huge majority of the monks are Greeks, but in keeping with its pan-Orthodox character the peninsula is home also to ascetics from the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, Romania, Bulgaria and Orthodox communities in other countries.

The Holy Mountain has long intrigued Westerners by its isolation, its sheer size as a piece of real estate consecrated to a religious piece of real estate consecrates to a reighbis purpose, and its prohibition of women and, theoretically, females of every species. The earliest records suggest that monastic life on Athos began in the 9th century. Today there are considerably fewer than 3,000 monks. are considerably fewer than 3,000 houses about a third as many as at the turn of the century. But these are not, by Athonian standards, hard times. At one point the depredations of pirates had reduced its population to a few hundred. Lately there has been a sizable influx of young university graduates into the Sherrard's book is a revised version of one that he published 25 years ago under the title "Athos. Mountain of Silence." There are three new chapters: on changes (particularly new roads) that portend a secularization of the environment; on the art and relics and their deeper significance for Orthodox spirituality. and on the layout and appearance of the monasteries.

The photographs are new and, with few exceptions, technically of high quality. Those that show church services in progress (a subject ordinarily barred to photographers, and therefore of special interest) are naturally not very coverative of the constant movement, the crise ing chant and the aroms of increases.

From the several studies that he has written on modern Greek culture and its historical roots, such as "The Greek East and the Latin West" and "The Wound of Greece," one suspects that Sherrard's first encounter with the country's Byzantine heritage triggered a Pla-tonic anamnesis, so attuned is he to that heritage. His enthusiasm puts him squarely on one side in the Hellas-or-Byzantium controversy over modern Greece's identity. It also helps explain why his final chapter, "The Way of Stillness," is such a good, even moving ac-count of the mystical yet practical theology that shapes and sustains Athos.

John J. Yiannias, an associate professor of a history at the University of Virginia, wrote this review for The Washington Post. who Nes LONDON - Eleven years ago. the annual Wimbledon champions' dinner might just as well have been J.S. college prom. The first dance, which traditionally goes to the two singles titlists, paired James Scott Connors, 21, and Christine Marie Evert, 19.

Beginning in 1974, six U.S. men have won Wimbledon; four of Borg's victories in finals were over Americans. Nine American men have won the U.S. Open; U.S. women have won Wimbledon six times, the open nine times.

But the era may be drawing to an end. At the French Open, Connors, 32, and McEnroe, 26, were the oldest quarterfinalists. There are six U.S. men among the top 15 in the world. Among them, only Aaron Krickstein, 17, is under 25. And he a one-surface (hardcourt) player with so many holes in his game it may be hard for him to advance beyond his current No. 11 ranking. Leconte, the world's 26th-ranked player, began hesitantly but went. on to produce a cascade of winners. It was his third consecutive victory over Lendi and his tifth in eight meetings. But the experienced Czech, a two-time Wimbledon semifinalist, had been expected to master Leconte, who will turn 22 on Thursday, in the pressure atmosphere of Center Court.

Lendl took the opening set, but could not contain Leconte in the next three and didn't help his cause by serving numerous double faults. His temper and concentration finally cracked in the sixth game of the fourth set when one of his serves was called out by the umpire. who overruled the linesman.

"How can you say the ball was out?" Lendl screamed at the unpire. "Have you never had a match where you screwed up." He lost the game to trail 5-1, and Leconte served out the match.

"I know how to play Lendl," Leconte said. "When he's serving well, there's nothing to do — like in the first set. But I know when he gets tight and nervous. I just said to myself: 'Let him play, let him make the point or the fault.'" Evert, the Australian and French champion and co-top seed here with Navratilova, took just over an hour to beat fellow American Anne Smith, 6-0, 6-4, and has lost only 11 games in her first four matches.

The Fatherly Godfather of Sampdoria

LONDON - At some unbearably crucial stage during Wednesday's Italian Cup final in Genoa, someone (probably his young lawyer daughter Francesca) will hand Paolo Mantovani a cigarette. A placebo, not the real thing. That, with his delicate heart, might kill Sampdoria's president.

But as Mantovani's little club mounts the threshold to history, the daughter will watch the beads of sweat on the father's brow, the temples rising, the tie wrenched from its collar. She will hear expletives never uttered during his billion-lire shipping deals and she will know his need to hold, to fondle, to crush the closest thing to a cigarette doctors will

With il presidente, Sampdoria is living its fantasy. In the season that Verona climbed past giants Juventus, Torino and Milan to capture the Italian League title, "Doria" has become the cup favorite.

Nothing that depends on players can be taken for granted. Mantovani will be repeating that under his breath. Yet Graeme Souness's stunning goal, giving Sampdoria a 1-0 away victory over AC Milan last Sunday raises the scale of expectation for the return leg. Hold hard to your nerve, Sampdoria, control the palpitations, and surely the first major prize in your 40-year existence will Anyone might think a single match a speck in the ocean to a man risen from $11-a-month office boy in Rome to multimillionaire tycoon. A man living by the grace of one of America's best heart surgeons; a father whose four children are entering the professions after expensive Swiss schooling; a man whose liberty remains threatened by fraud investigators who have hounded him for five years and denote trill not exting courts years. and, despite still not satisfying courts, would dearly like to imprison him for alleged mas-sive tax evasion and export irregularities.

Unless you can accept as an act of faith an Italian's love affair with his soccer, you will not begin to understand why Sampdoria U.C. with its drain on his bank balance and demands on his time and nervous system (it was at a soccer game in Cagliari that Manto-vani, at 51, suffered the heart attack that required a quadruple bypass) — should so consume him.

He will shrug and attempt a self-effacing smile. Wednesday, he will insist, is for the players; Paolo Mantovani is just a fan. a wealthy one who has chosen to help things to happen, but a fan like thousands of others. Let me tell you how, on past observation, Wednesday will come to him.

Unable to pay more than passing attention to the breakfast and lunch his cook meticulously prepares, he will by early evening - call his chauffeur and bodyguard.

They will leave the tranquility of his villa, overlooking the high seas on which his fortune was made. The green Mercedes will glide down the mountainous route east of Genoa toward the docklands and then into the medieval city where Andrea Doria, aristocratic naval commander and contemporary of Christopher Columbus, became an inspiration for a second Genoese soccer team to imagine it could go out and take on Europe and the world. For once Genoa will be a united soccer port. The passions will ooze toward the mu-nicipal stadium on Via del Piano (and overlooked by the prison where some would have Mantovani). Inside the arena, the president will walk the dingy corridors slowly, nervously, trying to keep to a minimum his contact th players, with whom he will have ritually shared a meal and a few hands of cards the previous evening.

Fifteen minutes before kickoff he will walk out onto the turf, his deliberate step hinting at the care he must take with his health. The crowd, especially the faithful ultras, bearing gigantic banners in blue and red and white, will greet him with a roar that transmits itself down to the dressing rooms.

Paolo Mantovani

For the next 90 minutes Mantovani and his opposite number, Giuseppe Farina, will share a haunting sense of impotence. From their seats, they cannot kick any leather nor

They already share much. Farina is no less ambitious, possibly as generous and certainly more impatient than Mantovani. As Milan's president, he too has more an obligation than a desire to win. Club presidents in Italy decide which overseas stars they will buy. And uniquely, almost perversely. Mantovani and Farina prefer British to Brazilian, Argentine or French.

Mantovani's $2 million bought Trevor Francis to score goals, Souness to make the play. Farina paid about the same for Mark Hateley's courage in pursuit of goals and Ray Wilkins's coolness in midfield.

Ironically, Mantovani's biggest regret is that Francis will miss the final because of a thigh injury caused by a collision with Wilkins. In personality and in style, Francis has been Mantrovani's favored son

Even Sampdoria supporters who have seen the best of Francis have grumbled at the frequent injuries that dilute his contributions. Mantovani scalds them. Francis, he insists, has no need to feel in debt to Sampdoria. The more people have doubted Francis, the more paternalistic have been his president's reasяцгалсея.

This apparent softness - especially compared to Farina's ruthless one-season hireand-fire of another British goal-scorer, Lu-ther Blissett — and Mantovani's strategy in nurturing young Italian prodigies alongside his foreign pair made people doubt the presi-

'We have like a marriage to 20 toward the future with patience," Mantovani answers. "I pay what I can afford for the club without making debts that can destroy Sampdoria.
"We are like Florence and Verona and Udinese, reaching up to the dominant three. I have been sure in my five years as president that we will go into Europe, but I wanted always a place to sit at the table, not to go there as waiter. For such a future you have to Italy being Italy, and Genoa being Genoa, there have alays been plenty whose minds are as suspicious as those of the tax inspectors who suspect aloud that il presidente has been too successful too soon.

They did not say I bought results when Sampdoria lost so many matches at the end of the previous season," he reflects. The dark, Roman eyes show neither annoyance nor surprise. "This job is already difficult without anything being bought. If anything could be bought, there is always the chance that somebody on the other side is paying more. No matter how many important presidents are involved, in the end only the strongest teams

His list goes on, emphasizing his point that 99 percent of what passes for news is actually nothing but olds. "To paraphrase last year's hit commercial, where's the change?" he asks.

The answer, Packman, is that there is plenty of change. This list of television's monotonies doesn't tell us that the world is changeless. It tells us only that television is not very good at detecting and report-ing change. Newspapers and magazines aren't much better.

The rules of the news business make it hard to report change. Unless the change creates an arresting picture, television isn't much interested. Unless newspapers can say that the change happened yester-day, they have a hard time with it. Here is a letter from Rey Barry of Charlottesville, Virginia, sug-gesting several changes that have occurred in recent American life: "Buttons used to stay on garments; socks used to lit feet; pic-ture frames used to cost less than the pictures; garden hoses used to last several seasons and good ones

The newspaper, of course, cannot say, "Americans sank yester-day into melancholy and despair because of possibly incorrect suspicions that their telephone problems are going to get worse and worse."

Melancholy is not like an explo-

Filming, Preserving 'Emerald Forest'

By Holcomb B. Noble New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Trying to make an anthropologically authentic movie in the Brazilian rain forest about isolated Amazon but it's never quite clear who's traveling in which direction.

Is it the Xingu Indians who are the primitives, the uncivilized remnants of a well-forgotten past? Or are the cement and steel of the construction dams now flooding parts of the Amazon closer to the Stone Age? In a sense, both the film and the making of it are a revealing two-way directed this trip in making "The Emerald Forest," starring Powers Boothe, Charley Boorman and Meg Foster: The movie is based on the true story of a 7-year-old boy who was kidnapped in 1972 by Indians. The boy's father, a Venezuelan engineer, spent every summer for the next 10 years searching the forests for his son, and finally found him. But when he did, he also found that the boy had become thoroughly integrated into the tribe.

The father decided to leave him there rather than bring him back to the "dead," as the Indians call the land of cities and polluted air and hydroelectric power projects that have irreparably damaged their territories and lives.

Boorman, who pursued themes of man against nature and man against man in "Deliverance" and "Excalibur," wondered whether this story might not take him fur-

Using a screenplay by Rospo Pallenberg, Boorman shot the film in the heart of the lush forest, using Indian actors, a Texan (Powers Boothe) to play the part of the engineer and his own son as the boy lost forever to another culture. But, building on the original story, he set its climactic scenes close by the actual con-struction of the world's fourth largest dam, the Tucurui, even as the Indians' beloved trees were being chewed up by giant construction equipment.

Boorman has described the making of the film in Brazil, beginning in August 1983, in a series States later this year.

The director did not want to make the film in a real Indian village using tribal people because Indians is a trip to the Stone Age. of the disruption it would cause them. For the most part he hired professional Indian actors from families in Rio de Janeiro or Belem, people who had left tribal life, and had them taught rituals and dances of the Kamaira tribe.

> Choosing the American engineer was easy. Boorman rejected the idea of a Robert Redford or a posed. Clint Eastwood as too expensive. He also turned down a suggestion by his producer friend. Jake Eberts, that he use Sam Waterston, whom Eberts hired for "The

did indeed witness a boy growing up on the set. It was Charley, not his stuntmen, who learned to be the best climber for a skyscraper scene in which the boy comes out of the jungle and scales a high-rise to his parents' apartment to seek the help of his father against an enemy tribe that has acquired

And it was Charley who recognized that Boothe was not acting during a scene in which father and son are supposed to be nearly drowning in rapids. The crew could not at first hear Boothe's cries for help against the roar of the waterfall. Charley, according to his father, kept Boothe afloat until trained divers could pull him out. Charley had swallowed a great deal of water himself, and it was hours before Boothe, who was given oxygen, could get to his

The film crew eventually found several appropriate sites, one with beautiful waterfalls, one right next to the huge dirt clearing for the Tucurui Dam. A village was built near Paraty, a town down the coast from Rio, and during much of the 17 weeks of shooting 40 minibuses carried 300 actors, crew members, and construction workers back from town to the edge of the forest.

Preserving the life of the rain forest with a minimum of this kind of disruption is clearly the overriding concern of the movie. Yet by the current thinking of both economists and anthropologists, the film oversimplifies and romanticizes the problem a bit.
